

R.J. Godlewski's

The INDEPENDENT
COUNTERTERRORIST
TRAINING PROGRAM

Panic in the Year "0"

To facilitate the incorporation of the civilian population into the war effort against international terrorists, the International Nuclear Emergency Response Team (INERT), R.J. Godlewski, Right Truth Blog, and affiliated parties are developing a volunteer training program to educate interested individuals in the fields of counterinsurgency, counterintelligence, counterterrorism, and counter-guerrilla warfare operations.

Each monthly module will consist of a brief narrative by R.J. Godlewski, appropriate federal military/civilian training manual/reports to review, and review questions to stimulate debate. There are no fees associated with these programs and no grades/certificates will be issued. This is strictly a volunteer program for educational purposes.

Topics:

Counterinsurgency, Operations, Che Guevara, Intelligence and Analysis, Interrogation, Explosive Ordnance Disposal, History of Terrorism, Castro and Terrorism, Psychology of Terrorism, Urban Warfare, Medical and Trauma Education, Survival and Evasion, Mine/Countermine Operations, Psychological Operations, Intelligence Preparation of the Battlefield, Shooting and Personal Defense, Police Intelligence Operations, Special Forces Intelligence, Combat and Operational Stress Control, Human Intelligence Collector Operations, Carlos Marighella, Urban Threats from Guerrilla and Terrorist Organizations, Nuclear Terrorism.

NOTICE:

Neither the author, INERT, nor any of its affiliated parties/individuals assume any responsibility for the misuse of any information contained within this training program. Seek competent legal advice before engaging within any personal plan of action.

"I was expecting one of you to stand up and behead him."

Muhammad the Prophet, criticizing his followers whose silence forced him to pardon Abdollah b. Abi Sarh for the "crime" of challenging Muhammad's ability to alter God's word (Dashti 1994, 75).

In fullest disclosure...

Let's cut the bullshit – again. I hold absolutely no respect for the man known to history as Muhammad the Prophet. I think that he was an opportunistic religious dictator who sought political power through any means necessary. I am saddened that many consider him to be a man of compassion and faith, for I personally attribute these personality traits with the likes of Jesus Christ, Mahatma Gandhi, and the Dalai Lama.

As a proud – if knowingly tainted – Roman Catholic, I know that Christ was God Incarnate and His actions upon earth were therefore infallible. I dare anyone to find one single instance in which Jesus harmed another living soul, directly or indirectly. You simply can't, for He was God.

As for Muhammad, however, history is ripe with his brutality. What might've begun as an attempt to formulate "change" within Arabia ended with the same old policies of self-destruction and death that existed for centuries within pre-Islamic Arabia. Power had simply gone to Muhammad's head and, ever since, his own people bore the brunt of the pain.

Much of the same could be said for President Barack Obama. He launched himself into the national spotlight by preaching compassion and hope, by offering a brighter future than what had existed prior to his arrival upon the public stage.

Unfortunately, President Obama's actions within the first fifty days of his administration have done nothing but to clarify himself as a typical politician. Someone who will do whatever it takes to personify his ambitions, even if it makes subsequent generations suffer immeasurably.

President Obama has convinced an entire generation that there is something wrong with America, when that group has simply not lived long enough to understand that what makes America great is not our politicians, but ourselves.

I, for one, am not too ashamed to admit that I hope President Obama fails miserably. I hope people grow to understand his policies in sufficient detail to pray that this man ends his tenure in an orange jumpsuit turning large rocks into cat litter. I say this, because I fear for America's future.

I fear that people will fall into the same trap as Communist Russians and Nazi Germans had – believing that an all-powerful state is somehow better than a flawed populace. I don't know about you, but I look upon my neighbors and fellow countrymen with more respect than I ever could with our national leaders.

It's not people that I hate...

Listen, I do not hate Obama supporters anymore than I hate Muslims. People of difference add to the color of life and make this world more exotic. It's just that I think most of these people are misguided. Perhaps they have good reason. I simply do not know. However, there is no legitimate excuse on the planet to kill or harm others indiscriminately. Period.

When I see Islamic terrorists torturing and beheading so-called infidels, for instance, I get angry. When I see the rest of the Muslim community silent on the issue and, through whatever reason they can foresee, suggest that somehow my actions or the actions of my country are to blame, well, then, I become pissed.

How dare anyone suggest that my neighbors and friends are the cause of Muslim disorder worldwide? If Muslims are suffering around the planet then the system must be faulty; it has nothing to do with people who'd rather not deal with you one way or another.

As for the Obama supporters. Do you actually believe that by raising taxes and significantly increasing spending you will somehow make this country a better place in which to live? Where is the "hope" in lack of effort? Would a college degree printed off the Internet be as valuable as one in which you devoted 120 credit hours towards? Would a physician ordained through a lottery drawing be one that you would feel comfortable with for your open-heart surgery? No, of course not.

People who support President Obama and hope that his policies succeed are those who want to experience without the effort. They are the people who want illegal aliens to have the same rights as the rest of you. They are the ones that want homosexuals to experience the same marriage that has been heterosexual for thousands of years.

They want people who've earned wealth to be punished for showing some initiative within their lives. In this context, President Barack Obama is no more respectable than, say, Che Guevara and I should not have to apologize for "hoping" that President Obama gets recognition as being our worst president ever. No politician should ever be held in more esteem than the nation of individuals that he or she serves.

...it's faulty leadership.

Whether we are speaking of Muhammad the Prophet or Obama the President, I simply will not accept them as honorable leaders. Their actions more than speak about their intentions. If you profess to hold people's best interests at heart, then you must be held accountable for your actions if chaos is the only thing you produce. Leadership thus comes with immense responsibility.

Our Creator bestowed upon us inalienable rights...

If we assume that people were created – not manufactured, planted, or programmed – then we have to assume that we have a Creator. If we assume that it takes two people to create a third, then we have to assume that “something” existed long before we did. Therefore, there has to be a pre-existing Creator within our lives.

Now, if we assume that, taken to its natural, scientifically-inspired conclusion, that man evolved from apes and apes evolved from rats and rats evolved from dinosaurs and dinosaurs evolved from fish and fish evolved from amoebas, and amoebas evolved from chemicals, and chemicals evolved from particles, and particles evolved from sub-particles, and sub-particles evolved from interactions, then we have to assume that everything evolved from something which existed beforehand.

At what point, therefore, can science hope to answer all of life's mysteries? What is easier to comprehend, evolution to the *n*th factor or that everyone came about because of a single Creator Who willed everything into existence? Simply retreating to the comforts of the Null Hypothesis cannot segregate God and Science. If God and Science cannot be separated, then the cosmos is indeed universal.

If we finally assume that God is very much real and existing, then we have to focus upon His ultimate corporal creatures – namely us. Do we exist as mere by-products of Creation or are we infinitely more valuable? I believe in the latter. Why? Easy.

Out of all of the fishes of the sea, the mountains on land, the binary neutron stars in space, and the BL Lac objects in distant episodes of time, we're the only objects traveling through this vast universe that can conceive of having been created.

My dog is smart enough to open a closed door with his tongue, but he cannot rationalize existence. My goldfish wait impatiently at 8 A.M. for their daily feeding, but they cannot conceive of where, exactly, their pre-poop comes from. My cockatiel can whistle in three octaves, but only those we have taught her. However, my two-year-old niece enters our local Church immediately with an ear-shattering “JA—EEEZE—US!” without as much as a visual prompt from our otherwise deeply stoical congregation.

If the individual human person – there being only one God as determined by the role of there being a Creator – is more important than any other living or inanimate object, then we have to conclude that our Creator would have given us certain rights. These being, principally:

1. We hold sovereignty over nature;
2. We are equally valuable – there can be no discrimination on the basis of race, sex, nationality, etc.;

3. Groups of individuals have no more rights than solitary humans.

Yet, as anyone with a pair of functioning eyes and ears knows, there are differences between human beings. How, then, can otherwise equal beings be different? Simple. We can choose to be different through our beliefs and our actions. We can promote differences through our associations and dissociations.

I can become R.J. Godlewski, infinitely unique, because I prefer to hang around whomever I choose and chastise those people who do not benefit my existence. This makes me human. That God will ultimately hold me accountable for my own actions makes me discretionary.

Therefore, I will defend all human life, regardless of whether I fancy their particular beliefs or not. If you are Muslim, fine, I'm all for that. Support President Obama? Great! More power to you. Don't believe in God? Hey, to each, his own.

Where problems arise is when one particular group tries to extinguish another. Here are some samples of such egregious crimes:

1. Nazi Germany murdering six million Jews;
2. The Prophet Muhammad assassinating dozens, if not hundreds or thousands, of Arabs

(and others) who did not profess allegiance to Islam;

3. The American Civil Liberties Union attacking Christianity here within decidedly Judeo-Christian America;
4. Power hungry African-American political leaders sabotaging the future of urban cities to enforce liberal agendas;
5. Muslims who promote or practice the murder of non-Muslims who exist or visit "Islamic" lands;
6. Christian clergy who abuse their powers for profit or personal gain;
7. Leaders who presume to know more than the people they serve.

I consider myself a fair and open-minded individual – within reason. I do not offer bias and have been known to pounce harder upon those whose beliefs I support than those I do not share any common beliefs with. Perhaps this is only natural. It is like the police officer who breaks the law or the Treasury Secretary who fails to pay his own taxes.

In matters of religion, I accord much more tolerance towards orthodox Jews, Muslims, and Evangelicals than I do with "avowed" Roman Catholics. I can afford to do this because with those of my own faith, I know when they are in error or not. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, for example, cannot claim to be Catholic and actively seek to destroy the very foundation of her faith at the same time. You cannot be at once Christian and support abortion. End of story.

A return to rational basics ...

Humanity exists for three basic reasons:

- To serve out God's mission for our existence;
- To aid our fellow humans through the free and voluntary expression of our unique talents;
- To procreate and continue the cycle.

Anyone who chooses a path divergent to any of the above simply does so out of petty selfishness. Secularists prevent us from acknowledging our divine purpose by forcibly restricting our admission thereof. Radical Islamists prevent us from "freely and voluntarily" expressing our individual talents. Liberals prevent society from procreation through mandated abortions and illegitimate homosexual marriages.

If we fail to realize that we are at war with these individuals, that they want to see our heritage destroyed and our future cast under the shackles of socialism and tyranny, then we deserve what awaits us. Fortunately, many are finally beginning to detect this shift away from faith, family, and freedom.

Panic in the Year "O".

As your "homework" assignment for this module, I want you to watch the 1962 movie *Panic in the Year Zero starring Ray Milland and Frankie Avalon. It is an eye-opening account of what happens to normal, everyday people when chaos descends upon them. Our future may be suspiciously close to that which the Baldwin family found themselves confronting.

Paramount amongst these threats are:

- The Obama Administration has signaled that it wants to equate Islamic terrorists with ordinary criminals and seeks global respect more than national security;
- Iran, North Korea, Russia, China, and Libya, among others, have signaled their belief in the impotence of an Obama government;
- Mexico is fighting for its survival and the clashes with drug cartels are already spilling across our borders;
- Our national borders are protected by nothing more powerful than the "honor system";
- Muslim extremists have no "honor";
- Efforts to safeguard our economy are taking an opposing role;

- No one cares more about your own safety than you do.

I wish to address this last item in greater detail, for it represents what this entire Independent Counterterrorist training program is all about – YOU taking some initiative in protecting yourself, your family, your friends, and your communities.

Let's face it; your survival in the hands of others hasn't a prayer. Our illustrious CIA, for instance, couldn't even survive a month in Afghanistan during the initial post-9/11 efforts without ordering 100 pounds of Starbucks® coffee (Schroen 2007, 220)! Perhaps this can only be expected from an Agency whose heritage prides itself on comprising "fun-loving...well-to-do, liberal Democrats" (Thomas 2006, 99)?

I do not know about you, but I'd feel a little more comfortable knowing that the people living in caves and dreaming of beheading us are being fought by people who can forgo a cup of jove in the process. What makes me sleep well at night is that I know that I am my own first line of defense against these thugs.

Every action that I take is orchestrated towards self-preservation. Others take too much on chance such as the young man who recently took his new and very much pregnant wife to Mexico on their honeymoon and proceeded to rent a car in which to tour the countryside. When they ran out of gasoline seventy miles from civilization, only the luck of finding courteous, machine gun-armed federal police officers saved the day – and probably their lives. The rest of us wouldn't be so fortunate.

This probably explains why many Americans are now turning to self-protection and survival in droves. Gun stores are seeing record sales – the only economic stimulus that President Obama's election can produce. Even while visiting the small "mom and pop" operation where I do my own shopping I noticed people literally walking in off the street and inquiring as to purchasing a gun where they had never fired one in their life. This, more than anything, provides us with hope.

As with the movie Panic in the Year Zero, "civilized" people will turn on you when their life is threatened. Forget the banks, the grocery stores will be sacked, the gasoline stations dried up, and marauders will seek personal satisfaction through your own demise.

Fortunately, you already understand this, which is why you're reading these words in the first place. It is evident in why sales of firearms and ammo are reaching astronomical proportions. It is evident in the way that stocks are falling while gold is soaring. Most importantly, it is acknowledged in the way that masses of people are finally – belatedly to be sure – realizing just how dangerous our new Obama administration is.

America can only remain great if we – the proud citizens of this great nation – rise up to the challenge.

Otherwise, the Year Zero will come faster than you can imagine.
